MEDIA ADVISORY

National Academy of Public Administration to Release No Time To Wait: Building a 21st Century Public Service

WASHINGTON, DC – The National Academy of Public Administration next week will release a new report, sponsored by the Samuel Freeman Charitable Trust, called No Time To Wait: Building a 21st Century Public Service.

The new report will focus on how in numerous situations, ranging from ensuring cyber safety to protecting the nation's borders, the federal government faces profound problems in making government work for the American people. And in case after case, these problems share a common root cause: the federal government's human capital system is fundamentally broken.

No Time to Wait: Building a 21st Century Public Service presents a reform proposal that would transform the federal government's existing human capital system and processes in a profound way. The report will be discussed by a blue-ribbon panel of experts in the field of public administration.

The event will be live-streamed here. To register to attend, please click here.
